'Study of Collected Narratives on Gender Perspectives in the 27 EU Member states - Synthesis Report', an EIGE 2013 publication

In September 2013, the European Institute for Gender Equality \(EIGE\) released a 'Study of Collected Narratives on Gender Perceptions in the 27 EU Member States - Synthesis Report'. The aim of the synthesis report is to map the persistence of stereotypical gender attitudes and perceptions, through the collection of real-life stories related to gender perceptions, in the form of narratives. These narratives were then placed in an online database, and have then been analysed with the goal of identifying how stereotypical gender perceptions influence people's lives, as well as to provide background information on possible obstacles for increased gender equality. The report's content includes, among others: information on methodology used, an overview of collected narratives, as well as information on the dimension and effects of gender stereotypes, and how to deal with them, and very interestingly, inter-generational differences in gender perceptions.
